	In 2024, the three principal program service areas included clean energy finance, federal energy innovation program management, and clean hydrogen market formation. The Energy Futures Finance Forum (EF3) is a novel effort to identify policies and measures to expand the attractiveness of investment opportunities in clean energy to a broader cross-section of the investment community. The foundation issued several reports on this topic, including a framework report identifying potential additional sources of clean energy finance and a report on identifying opportunities to enhance investment opportunities in industrial carbon capture and storage. In 2024, the Foundation launched a new multi-year effort, the Nuclear Scaling Initiative, together with the Clean Air Task Force and the Nuclear Threat Initiative, to enable the expanded deployment of new nuclear energy generation. The foundation formed the Hydrogen Demand Initiative (H2DI), a consortium of six entities, to develop a novel program design to stimulate creation of new markets for clean hydrogen. The consortium conducted an extensive market assessment with outreach efforts to over 200 companies that expressed interest in hydrogen market formation. The project was a follow-on to previous work to identify the need for new policies and programs to enable the formation of regional markets for clean hydrogen in power generation, industrial, and commercial applications. Finally, the foundation continued work on a major study initiative on opportunities to improve the effectiveness, efficiency, and agility of federally funded energy innovation programs and projects.
