

Ripples of Hope, and

A Theory of Social Change

By creating positive bi-partisan change on human rights issues affecting children in one state in each region of the country, we create momentum that will lead to continued wide-scale, systemic change in that region and, eventually, to the entire country. With each successful campaign, we position child rights advocates in neighboring states in the region to achieve the same policy victories year after year. This cultivates hope in every corner of the nation and creates a ripple effect that emboldens advocates and inspires policymakers to champion similar reforms, which in turn creates more hope for future reforms.
