Description of Program Service OneCampaign Accomplishments in 2007: Campaign Priorities and Accomplishments:

1. Starting an energy revolution to address the number one threat facing our planet: climate change.

Greenpeace, Inc. works for a true energy revolution—one that gives hope for future generations. Our campaign seeks to move the world powered by fossil and nuclear fuels to one running on renewable energy. For more than 20 years, Greenpeace, Inc. has been working to confront global warming.

Early in 2007, we released and promoted a blueprint for solving global warming that simultaneously meets America's energy needs while avoiding the pitfalls of nuclear power and the creation of more coal plants. To build support for this energy revolution, we launched non-partisan grassroots organizing under the name Project Hot Seat in 13 communities, conducted 20 direct communications around the country related to Project Hot Seat, generated more than 60,000 emails and petition signatures to Congress, and ultimately delivered 7 new co-sponsors of global warming legislation as a result of our work.

At the end of 2007, Greenpeace, Inc. climate campaigners joined the global Greenpeace team at the Bali climate negotiations in Indonesia and played a key role in a dramatic, last-minute U-turn in the U.S. negotiating stance that saved the Bali talks from failure and cleared the way for a new round of negotiations that will take us closer to a global solution to confront the threat posed by global warming.

As we worked to promote real solutions to global warming, we continued to expose false ones. Throughout the year, we continued our public education efforts to isolate and debunk global warming deniers and expose their biased agenda being funded by companies such as ExxonMobil with a clear interest not promoting real solutions.

2. Defending our oceans by challenging wasteful and destructive fishing and creating a global network of marine reserves.

Without the global ocean there would be no life on Earth. A staggering 80 percent of all the life on Earth is to be found hidden beneath the waves and our vast global ocean pulses around the world driving the natural forces which maintain life on our planet.

To preserve life and end the slaughter of the magnificent and endangered whales, in May, Greenpeace, Inc. rallied in Anchorage, Alaska for the first International Whaling Commission (IWC) meeting on U.S. soil in nearly two decades to ensure the global moratorium on whaling not be overturned. We recruited celebrities to help highlight the plight of the whales, including Sir Anthony Hopkins, who recorded a Public Service Announcement (PSA), aired in key media markets. The star of the TV Show Heroes, Hayden Panettiere, joined 300 people and 10 "whales" costumed activists in our international Big Blue March at the meeting.

Throughout the summer of 2007, to help make the case for the end of destructive fishing and the establishment of marine reserves, Greenpeace, Inc. sponsored a scientific and educational outreach tour in the Bering Sea and in communities in the area. During the voyage, we surveyed and documented the damage done by bottom trawling as well as the diverse coral life in mini-submarines using a remotely operated vehicle within the Zhemchug and Pribilof canyons.

In more than 25 manned dives, trained staff in mini-submarines reached depths of up to 2000 feet below the Bering's surface, documenting abundant fish and wildlife in the canyons-Dall's porpoises, diving seabirds, rockfish, giant pacific octopus, tiny shrimp, brittle stars, sea fans, sponges and, more importantly, over a dozen species of cold water corals. In three weeks of dives we collected more than 100 scientific specimens, 20 of which were not previously documented in the region and at least one of which was an entirely new species-a sponge that we have named Aaptos kanuux.

The tour garnered media coverage both within and beyond Alaska, including feature stories in the Anchorage Daily News, the Dutch Harbor Fisherman and numerous community papers. Crewmembers were interviewed three separate times on Alaska Public Radio; and a lengthy interview with Sierra Club Radio in San Francisco carried the story nationwide on the Pacifica network. Even more importantly, the expedition was covered in Science, the journal of record for the scientific community and environmental policymakers alike.

Greenpeace, Inc. staff supported colleagues around the world with campaigns to stop pollution in the oceans, unsustainable fishing and unfair fisheries stealing fish from protected waters.

3. Protecting the world's magnificent ancient forests and the animals, plants and people that depend on them.

The world's ancient forests are truly diverse. They include boreal, temperate and tropical forests, coniferous and broadleaf forests, rainforests and mangroves. Together they maintain environmental systems that are essential for life on Earth.

In 2007, Greenpeace, Inc. worked to preserve the Ancient Forests by campaigning to pressure the Kimberly-Clark Corporation to use recycled fiber in its products. Kimberly-Clark Corporation uses "virgin" fiber from clear-cut ancient forests. Most of the pulp Kimberly-Clark uses for its disposable tissue products comes from unsustainable sources. This includes wood fiber from ancient forests like the Canadian Boreal Forest, a large forested area covering a huge area of North America. Most of the consumer products Kimberly-Clark sells in stores, including Kleenex, contain no recycled fiber at all. Activities throughout the year brought the public's attention to the campaign and asked the public to support our call for the company to immediately stop purchasing virgin fiber from endangered forests, to increase drastically the amount of recycled fiber that they use for all their tissue products including Kleenex brand toilet paper, facial tissue and napkins and finally to buy only fiber from Forest Stewardship Council (FSC) eco-certified forests. The FSC is the only guarantee that forests are managed sustainably.

For the last two years, Greenpeace, Inc. campaigned to protect the southeast Alaskan rainforest by mobilizing musical instrument manufacturers like Taylor, Martin, Gibson and Fender to encourage southeast Alaska's largest owner of privately held land to manage its forests in a sustainable way. Sustainable management would protect the animals and plants dependent on the forest. Greenpeace, Inc. campaigned for the company to work towards becoming certified by the Forest Stewardship Council thus ensuring a healthy future for its forests. In 2007, the company instituted a process to assess its entire land base, 290,000 acres, for potential Forest Stewardship Council certification.

In the Summer of 2007, we passed another milestone when landmark legislation, as amendments to the Lacey Act, was introduced in Congress that would permanently ban the importation of illegal timber and other wood products into the United States. The United States remains the world's largest single market for finished wood products and thus a major driver of illegal logging for mahogany, ramin, teak and other exotic hardwoods. After working for years to address this trade on a species by species basis, we began work this year on a more holistic solution. For more than a hundred years, a law called the Lacey Act has banned interstate and international trade in fish and wildlife products that were harvested illegally. Working with the non-profit Environmental Investigation Agency and a bipartisan coalition representing both industry and environmental groups, we crafted amendments to extend Lacey's protections to foreign plant species, regardless of where they come from. Both the United States House of Representatives and the United States Senate passed the Lacey Act amendments in 2007.

Protecting ancient forests outside North America and working with colleagues around the world, Greenpeace, Inc. worked to protect the Congo rainforest by bringing attention to an investigation on the environmental and economic havoc brought on by international logging. In Indonesia, Greenpeace, Inc. staff supported a "Forest Defenders Camp" deep in the forest to spot and fight forest fires, conduct surveys on the depth of peat underlying the forest, and undertake a comprehensive assessment of biodiversity in the area as a way to bear witness to the forest's destruction.

4. Creating a toxic free future with safer alternatives to hazardous chemicals in today's products and manufacturing.

Toxic chemicals in our environment threaten rivers, lakes, our air, land, and oceans, and ultimately ourselves.

After six years of hitting the marble floors of the United States Capitol, climbing through railroad tunnels with reporters and graffiti artists alike, choreographing creative communications in front of the Capitol and carrying our message to editorial boards across the country, our campaign to create a toxic free future saw victory this past August. Congress approved a bill that included provisions to increase public safety by re-routing ultra-hazardous cargo around densely populated areas. The President's signing of the bill set the stage for more ambitious legislation that would require chemical companies to switch to safer materials. The New York Times, Wall Street Journal, Washington Post, Boston Globe and National Public Radio's Morning Edition covered the story, focusing on how toxic chemical use and transport threatens the safety of U.S. cities.

We also continued our work to reduce toxic waste from electronic consumer products. In June and September, Greenpeace, Inc. released updated versions of our Guide to Greener Electronics. In October, we pushed the campaign into new territory with the results of our iPhone testing and a new report ranking major laptop manufacturers. The iPhone report generated media coverage nationwide, with reporting by ABC News, San Jose Mercury News (hometown paper to the Silicon Valley technology industry), Environment & Energy Daily, MacWorld, Fort Worth Star Telegram, Red Herring and business and industry journals across the country, including the Silicon Valley News Journal, Electronic News and TechNewsWorld. The story garnered even wider distribution on the web, directly reaching Mac fans worldwide. A Greenpeace, Inc. video about the tests received more than 180,000 views during its first week on YouTube. The tests generated widespread debate within the blogosphere, providing additional opportunities to engage the industry, decision-makers and interested consumers on the issue in key online outlets like BusinessWeek.

Information, Education and Communication Accomplishments in 2007

Greenpeace, Inc. produces a quarterly newsletter, Update, and sends it to supporters. Update contains informative articles on campaign activities and educational information on our campaigns and issues. Greenpeace, Inc. maintains a website (www.greenpeace.org) which contains information on all campaign activities and serves as a resource. The website also links to other Greenpeace entities around the world and their campaign work. In addition, Greenpeace, Inc. maintains additional sites connected to campaigns, such as www.musicwood.org, www.greenmyapple.org, and www.exxonsecrets.org. Greenpeace, Inc. maintains and supports an activist network, engaging activists through education and opportunities to contact elected officials, community leaders, business leaders and others in order to voice their opinions. Greenpeace, Inc. also reaches the public through local and national media as well as new media and a growing on line presence on Facebook, YouTube, MySpace and other new media outlets. As of 2007, there were over 80,000 friends on MySpace promoting our campaign work.

Membership Development and Movement Building in 2007

Greenpeace, Inc. is building a strong activist base through its membership programs. Our membership growth directly supports our campaigns since we work hard to integrate members into campaign activities. Greenpeace, Inc. is delivering enhanced supporter experience and increased supporter participation with integration of both membership development and the above mentioned campaign priorities, as well as other campaign work, and on/off line, through effective coordination of activity and communications. Greenpeace, Inc. mobilized hundreds of people in more than a dozen cities to participate in Step It Up 2007, a national day of action on global warming. Greenpeace, Inc. supported Power Shift, the first-ever-national youth summit to solve the climate crisis. The conference engaged high school and college students from all 50 states about solutions to global warming and how they can put those solutions into practice on their campuses, in their communities, and in the political arena. Greenpeace, Inc. sponsored three "Greenpeace Organizing Terms" for college students who received a semester of training in our offices with the goal of developing their leadership and organizing skills as activists.
